Prompt and Complete Reporting Of Bites Best Rabies Control

The following timely article on rabies was prepared for the County Health Department by Clifford G. Gutting, head of the communicable disease investigations division of the department.

Rabies control is dependent upon the prompt and complete reporting of animal bites. With such reporting the Health Department can see that the person bitten receives proper medical treatment, and that the offending animal is quarantined and observed for symptoms of rabies. The reporting of all animal bites is mandatory by State law.

Records of the Los Angeles County Health Department show that it is the non-reported animal bites which have been responsible for all the known cases of human rabies which have occurred in the Los Angeles County health jurisdiction.

THE TWO most recent cases of human rabies in Southern California occurred in April, 1957, and June, 1959. In neither instance had an animal bite been reported to the health department before the human being came down with the disease.

The first case mentioned was that of a professional dog trainer who died of human rabies in April, 1957. It was determined by investigation that the patient was apparently bitten by a stray dog, but failed to report the animal bite to the health department.

THE SECOND case involved a mining engineer, residing in Pasadena City, who in the course of his employment for a fertilizer company apparently was exposed to a rabid bat in another area of the United States. Subsequent history indicated that the patient was unaware of any bite, or exposure other than in being in caves with bats. This individual died on June 3, 1959, of human rabies.

In the first case prompt reporting of the bite and subsequent anti-rabies treatment might have prevented a death.

In the second case lack of knowledge of an exposure prevented appropriate action from being taken.

A SIMILAR occurrence might easily occur in Los Angeles County if we allow ourselves a false sense of security regarding the danger of rabies infection in the animal population of Los Angeles County. Although there has been a decided increase in the incidence of known cases of animal rabies in Los Angeles County, the danger of animal rabies is still present.

The complete elimination of animal rabies in this County is a long-range program and, in the interim, if we are to succeed, the cooperation of everyone is essential.

NO CASE of human rabies has developed in the Los Angeles County Health Department jurisdiction when the exposure, be it animal bite or contact with a rabid animal, was reported to the Health Department prior to onset of symptoms. Each animal bite is a potential case of human rabies and only when those bites are promptly reported can the Health Department's program of safeguarding the population from the dread disease of human rabies become most effective.
